

What is play biting?

Young dogs and puppies are little biting machines. They bite things that move, things that don't move, each other, your hands, anything. Not only is this normal, it is an important part of their development. When puppies play, they learn from their playmates' yelps and body language when a bite is too hard. Over time, a puppy figures out how to use her mouth more gently (inhibit her bite) to keep play going.

Why you should allow some biting?

Your young dog or puppy needs to learn that human skin is fragile and can't be treated as roughly as a fur coat. Let your puppy bite you every now and again so you can let her know which bites are too hard. Otherwise she won't learn to inhibit her bite and, if she is ever startled and bites on instinct, she may cause serious injury. From 6-18 weeks of age, allow your puppy to bite when playing as long as it is not too hard.

How to teach your puppy to bite more softly?

Hard bites should result in a timeout. Stop play, and leave your puppy alone or put her in a timeout area for one minute.

Don't phase out play biting all together until your dog is reliably biting softly. Then you can redirect her to toys or time her out for all bites.

Rate how hard your puppy bites:

- 1 – You can feel it, but barely.
- 2 – There's some pressure, but you barely flinch.
- 3 – Wow, those little teeth are sharp, but it's tolerable.
- 4 – Ok, that hurts a bit. It might even leave a mark.
- 5 – Ah, Ah! That hurts and your hand is now bleeding.

For one week, give your dog a time out if she gives you a level 5 bite. The following week, time out anything that is a 4 or above. Continue this process until your dog consistently delivers only level 1 bites.

Teach a cue for "gentle"

- Squeaky toys; they are to teach dogs to be gentle not to be torn apart. Give your dog the squeaky tell him easy or gentle, every time it squeaks say ah, ah and take it from him. Do this until he will gently hold without it making any noise and heavily praise for being gentle.
- Frozen treats; don't allow your dog to take it in their mouth. If he tries to say ah, ah and remove it, allowing only to lick it and labelling it as gentle when he does.

Training Tip: Think about when your puppy is most likely to play bite and be ready to deliver a timeout if necessary. For example, when playing tug, when your puppy is excited about something, and when you come home from work
